Learning Intention

I am learning to plan and write a recount that sequences events clearly and reflects on their significance.

Success Criteria

- I can sequence events in chronological order using time connectives.
- I can include specific, relevant detail about an experience.
- I can reflect on the significance of an event.

Sequence, Detail, Reflect

A strong recount moves through events in order using time connectives (first, after that, finally), includes specific sensory detail, and ends with a personal reflection on why the experience mattered.

Worked Example

First, we hiked to the lookout as the sun rose over the valley. After that, we spotted a family of kangaroos grazing below.

Part A — Planning Your Recount

Choose a real or imagined school camp experience. Briefly describe the setting and who was there.

List 3 key events in the order they happened, using time connectives.

1. _____ 2. _____ 3. _____

Write one sentence with specific sensory detail (something you saw, heard, smelt or felt).

-----

Write a reflection sentence explaining why this experience was significant to you.

-----

Part B — Sequencing and Detail

Circle 3 time connectives you could use in a recount: first suddenly after that because finally

Rewrite this vague sentence with more specific detail: 'We did some activities at camp.'

Write a sentence describing how you felt at one specific moment during the experience.

-----

Explain why reflecting on an experience (not just listing events) makes a recount more engaging to read.

-----

Word Bank

chronological • time connective • sensory detail • reflection • significance • sequence

Answer Key — Part A

A1: Student's own setting/character description — teacher to check.

A2: Student's own 3 sequenced events using time connectives — teacher to check chronological order and connective use.

A3: Student's own sensory detail sentence — teacher to check it references a specific sense.

A4: Student's own reflection sentence — teacher to check it explains personal significance, not just restating events.

Part B

B1: first, after that, finally.

B2: Any rewrite with specific, concrete detail (e.g. "We paddled kayaks across the lake and set up camp before sunset.") — teacher to check specificity improved.

B3: Student's own feeling-based sentence tied to a specific moment — teacher to check.

B4: Reflecting helps the reader understand why the experience mattered to the writer personally, creating an emotional connection rather than just a plain list of what happened.

I Can Checklist

☐ I can sequence events using time connectives.

☐ I can reflect on the significance of an event.

☐ I can include specific, relevant detail.
